

This newspaper dated March 2, 1861, featured Lincoln's beard with a picture of the President-elect entitled, "Mr. Lincoln In His New Facial Appointments," and a short article bearing the same title.

Lincoln Putting on(H)airs

R. Gerald McMurtry, Director Emeritus Lincoln Library-Museum of the Lincoln National Life Foundation

Abraham Lincoln was the first President of the United States to wear a beard, and in the late months of 1860 and the early months of 1861 practically everybody was talking about this "noble hirsute appendage" which the Presidentelect had affected. When Lincoln's beard first started to grow, a newspaper reporter with a whimsical sense of humor wrote that "the President was putting on (hairs."

Those close to Lincoln in the Republican party were quick to point out that bearded men of action were now destined to take over the reins of government from clean-shaven men who dressed in broadcloth and whose chief attribute was oratory. The opposition press saw "something supremely ridiculous... in having a President elect ... devote his energies to cultivating whiskers." Nevertheless, beards were becoming popular in the 1860's.

by

Perhaps there were several good reasons why Lincoln grew a beard while waiting to assume office. Lincoln had no illusions about his appearance, but no one knows for certain that he grew whiskers to cover up his homeliness. Some claims have been advanced that influential political leaders in the Republican party advised a beard to give the incoming President a look of distinction.

It was eleven-year-old Grace Bedell of Westfield, New York, who forthrightly broached the subject. Spurred by a picture of Lincoln and vice-presidential running mate Hannibal Hamlin which her father had brought home, she wrote the President-elect a letter. She discreetly pointed out that "All the ladies like whiskers and they would tease their husband's to vote for you ...." Grace was convincing. She wrote that "I have got 4 brother's and part of them will vote for you any way and if you will let your whiskers grow I will try and get the rest of them to vote for you." She continued that "you would look a great deal better for your face is so thin." Lincoln's eleven-vear-old correspondent assured Lincoin that "My father is going to vote for you" and she wrote that "if I was a man I would vote for you to [o] but I will try to get every one to vote for you that I can."

matheld Claten gout is 14 H. A Blanest Jun Sa ky father has just home from the face and langth home gove factive and the Kome faction and the Kometice I and a hille get only eleven gross old , but want you should I President of the United States very much a Shope you wont think an very late to write to such a guest man as gonice Here you any live jul chut as lays as tom of a gue them my love and all buch about to the part cannot have the live I have got & listhers and part of them well aste for your any may and if you well let your which are grow I will try and get the rest If them to only be gone you would look a pract due to the for your face is as them All The badres like whiches and they would tere their husband . to vote for you and then you would be President they father is a group with for you and if I was as man I would whe for you to but sand they and get very one to vote for you that I am I think That sail fine around your peture makes it look very pretty I have got for little baby where their here weeks old and is just as curning as ear be When you sivet your letter diret to gran Andele mathela Schatanzone County tree Jack I must not write any more ensure This letter right off bood by Fran Ridele

Princip Springfiew, See Oci 19.1860 Muss Grace Beauce My dear little Mun 15ce your very aqueace liter of the received I reque the manners of having a sons one seventery one miny and and server years of agoin they, we they mother constitute my whole for As to the whichers, having neiser woon any, do you not thenk people wave case it a piece of sieg of I were to layer a por of your very anew welcoursky Alucola

Left. An eleven-year-old girl, Grace Bedell, sent this letter to Mr. Lincoln suggesting that he grow a beard. Above, Mr. Lincoln's reply,

Lincoln replied to Grace on October 19, 1860, that "As to the whiskers, having never worn any, do you not think people would call it a piece of silly affect[at]ion if I were to begin it now?"

Shortly after this correspondence Lincoln let his whiskers grow and thereby made obsolete all the paintings, lithographs and engravings that had been published and widely circulated during his 1860 presidential campaign. Many people wondered how the beard could have grown so rapidly when they first saw the President-elect on his inaugural tour enroute to Washington, D.C.

To be sure, the whiskers stirred up much ridicule in the contemporary press. Even Vanity Fair, March 16, 1861, published a cartoon of a bust of Lincoln with a beard exhibited in an "Agency For The Lincoln Whiskeropherous." The clerk in the cartoon advised his customer to "Try one of these pots, Sir, and in three weeks you will be as hairy and handsome as he is."

However, it was The New York Illustrated News, dated March 2, 1861, that made what appears to be the official announcement of Lincoln's beard:

"Now that kings, statesmen, and even handsome priests, whilst preaching of heavenly glories in general, and of their own glories in particular, have adopted the patriarchal fashion of beards and whiskers, as their highest and manliest adornment, there is no wonder that ambitious Americansdesirous of emulating such distinguished company-should cultivate their 'mustaches' and 'whiskeranders'.

"Our good President-elect, 'Honest old Abe,' sets us a brave example in this respect, which all gentlemen, beardless from principle hitherto, will do well to adopt. 'Honest Abe' has cultivated his whiskers, and looks as big and handsome now as the best and greatest of his contemporaries. We have the honor of presenting our readers with the first portrait of him taken with his new facial appointments, and we hope all patriotic ladies will fall in love with him."

The Vanity Fair cartoon which lampooned Lincoln's whiskers.

This same newspaper ran a second article entitled, "Hirsute Luxuriance":

"Every one is talking about the newly-grown whiskers of President Lincoln. It has become the topic of the day. A few weeks ago Mr. Lincoln's cheeks and chin were innocent of anything approaching [a] beard, and looked as though it was impossible to produce on them the noble hirsute appendages of manhood. A young lady in Buffalo [Westfield]. who transferred his portrait to her scrap-book accidentally discovered that her political hero presented a much more dignified appearance when whiskers were penciled on his visage; so she wrote him to that effect. He at once, like a sensible man, took the hint, and as time was precious. he resolved to ascertain what hair-producing preparation there was in existence which he could most confidently call on. Accordingly he obtained a large box of a 'Stimulating Onquent' known as Bellingham's. With this extraordinary paste he soon started the manly adornment which is at present the theme of all classes of society. By adopting this plan Mr. Lincoln has in a few weeks so changed his countenance that all portraits which have been treasured up as representing him have to be discarded as not any longer likenesses. Mr. Lincoln in doing this is wisely imitating the taste and the practice of all the truly great men of his era. We are, as a people, very properly returning to the customs of the ancients--to the example of the Apostles and their Gracious Guide-to the fashions of men in the first and innocent ages, as well as to their boast in what are styled the heroic periods. See advertisement on the outside page."

There is no evidence that Lincoln used Bellingham's Stimulating Onguent in growing his beard. In all likelihood the advertisement in The New York Illustrated News was unauthorized. However, the Horace L. Hegeman Company, the manufacturers of the onguent, made the most of Lincoln's beard with advertisements in the above newspaper, the New York Herald (March 3, 1861) and other news media.

Was Lincoln's appearance improved? Some people thought the beard implied responsibility like "a sea-captain handling a ship in a storm on a starless night." Perhaps the whiskers gave Lincoln "a more sober and serene outlook ... like a serious farmer with crops to look after, or a church sexton in charge of grave affairs." Regardless of whether or not the beard improved Lincoln's appearance, the promoters of Bellingham's Stimulating Onguent had a Madison Avenue approach to an unlimited market.

A full column advertisement of Bellingham's Stimulating Onguent which appeared in The New York Illustrated News of March 2, 1861.

TIDERO AND ATTE

F-10002-6-76